CHARLESTOWN PATRIOT-BRIDGE

450 FLAGS DISPLAYED AT HOOD PARK IN HONOR OF 9/11

Special to the Patriot-Bridge

There are 450 American flags currently displayed throughout Hood Park in Charlestown in remembrance of the lives lost on September 11, 2001. The flags were donated by Boston-based Lafuente Sign & Awning to Project 351, a Massachusetts nonprofit that brings together a network of young leaders from communities across the state through service and community-building.

The display offers a meaningful way for the Charlestown community to honor those impacted by 9/11 while recognizing the importance of service and giving back.

DATA CENTERS: WE HAVE MET THE ENEMY AND THEY ARE US

The massive build-out of data centers recently has aroused the wrath of the American public across the political spectrum. However, this backlash has highlighted a sharp disconnect in modern society: On the one hand, we expect technology to provide us with an on-demand, 21st-century digital lifestyle, but on the other, we eschew the infrastructure required to provide us with the means to implement our way of life.

The enormous scale of the newest data centers is difficult to comprehend. The largest data center for Meta (Facebook) in Oregon presently comprises 4.6 million square feet across 11 connected buildings.

But that is nothing compared to Meta's new center in Louisiana that will cover 3,650 acres (about six square miles), a footprint that is almost four times the size of New York City's Central Park.

The environmental impact of data centers is significant: They require huge amounts of water for cooling; most have their own generators that rely either on their own natural gas turbines or the electric grid (often with diesel generators for back-up) that contribute to air pollution; and the industrial cooling systems and rooftop fans create a constant level of noise.

However, using Meta as an example, hundreds of millions of Americans use Meta's platforms -- Facebook, Instagram, Messenger, and WhatsApp -- not merely daily, but on a constant basis, 24/7.

Americans also rely on the other companies with huge data centers, most notably Amazon for our shopping and Alphabet (which owns Google and YouTube) for our information and entertainment.

To be sure, the trillion-dollar tech firms building these data centers must be required to do more to reduce their impact on local communities and the environment.

But in the end, we have to admit a basic truth: Data centers exist because of our insatiable need and desire to click...click.. click...

City adopts clean energy infrastructure zoning

Special to the Patriot-Bridge

The City of Boston Zoning Commission this week adopted new zoning for Small Clean Energy Infrastructure to comply with the Massachusetts State Climate Act. This new zoning establishes a 'Consolidated Local Permitting process' in line with State law and Boston's own climate resiliency goals. The new zoning and permitting process is an effort to decarbonize and transition our energy sources to be fully electric in the coming years. The new zoning also introduces regulations on dimensions and use for Battery Energy Storage Systems (BESS).

"As our communities continue to grow, so does the need to transition to cleaner, more sustainable energy sources. This new zoning will help expand our electric capacity, lower costs and ensure that current and future generations can enjoy our beautiful city," said Mayor Michelle Wu. "Boston has set clear goals to reduce carbon emissions by 2030, and we will continue taking big swings to improve quality of life for all our residents."

"Not only is this a win for meeting our carbon neutrality goals, but it's also another example of how we continue to reform our permitting process," said Chief of Planning Kairos Shen. "Streamlining for clarity and predictability is essential to creating a more energy efficient city."

"The benefits of clean energy and battery storage are clear: more affordable electricity, less pollution, and local control over our energy production," said Chief Climate Officer Brian Swett. "Improving how we permit clean energy infrastructure is a critical step in reducing Boston's emissions and achieving our shared climate action goals"

The State is requiring cities and towns to provide this opt-in consolidated permitting process for this type of infrastructure by October 1, 2026, aligning with the energy resilience goals of Boston's 2030 Climate Action Plan and our goals of reducing carbon emissions by 2050. This kind of infrastructure can include things like solar panels, wind energy turbines, battery energy storage, and short energy transmission lines.

"Solar and storage are some of the cheapest and fastest energy we can build," said Massachusetts Energy Resources Commissioner Elizabeth Mahony. "The City of Boston is taking an important step forward in bringing more clean energy into Massachusetts to lower costs and reduce climate-warming emissions."

This new zoning and permitting process supports the City's efforts to increase Boston's grid capacity to keep costs low and reduce pollution for a healthier community. The Planning Department will now focus on creating design guidelines for this type of infrastructure that will ensure it is always consistent with neighborhood context and enhance the safety of public spaces.

The City of Boston's Planning Department shapes growth that serves Boston's residents and centers their needs. Our mission is to address our City's greatest challenges: resilience, affordability, and equity, and to take real estate actions and prioritize planning, development, and urban design solutions that further these priorities. We seek to build trust with communities through transparent processes that embrace predictable growth and shape a more inclusive city for all. ## A Look to the Past

Beyond the Neck: When Somerville was Charlestown

By Nancy Hayford Kueny

The history of Charlestown is diverse and multi-faceted. The area was inhabited by the Massachusett Tribe who called it Mishawum, before being settled by the English beginning in 1628 prior to the arrival of the Winthrop Fleet in 1630. Not only is it the site of one of the most significant battles of the American Revolution, but it has a rich Irish heritage and a significant naval and maritime history in addition to its indigenous history, which dates to 8000-10,000 BCE.

Historically, the Doctrine of Discovery asserted that a Christian European country could assume ownership of a non-Christian 'discovered' land. This uncodified 'custom', in effect for centuries, was the British justification for colonization. It should be noted that although King Charles I granted the Massachusetts Bay Company the tract, Squaw Sachem, the hereditary indigenous leader of the rightful inhabitants, sold Charlestown, Cambridge (Newtowne) and Watertown to Governor Winthrop for 21 coats, 19 fathom of wampum, and 3 bushels of corn, as well as a £23 annuity and lifetime rights for she and her people to continue to hunt and fish in the territory.

The original colonial land grant was a massive tract comprised of the current towns of Charlestown, Somerville, Medford, Everett, Malden, Melrose, Stoneham, Wilmington, Reading, Woburn, Burington and Winchester. These towns all eventually separated from Charlestown over a 200-year period, with Woburn being the first to break away in 1642 and Somerville not separating until 1842.

In the 17th century, peninsular Charlestown was surrounded by the Charles River, Boston Harbor and the Mystic River. Like Boston at the time, it was connected to the mainland by an isthmus, a narrow strip of land known as 'the Neck' which sometimes flooded during high tide. If not travelling to Charlestown by boat, one had to cross the Neck, now the Sullivan Square area.

The area beyond the Neck was 'mainland' Charlestown which today comprises the entire town of Somerville, four times the size of Charlestown. After initially occupying only the peninsula for strategic and safety reasons, the colonists soon began utilizing the mainland tract, which became an integral part of the settlement as the communal Cow Commons, used for grazing and planting. By 1632, a herdsman was hired "to Keepe the Milch Cattle of this Towne in a herd without the neck of land upon ye maine …". A short time later it was known as the "Stinted Pasture", the term referring to the regulation and allocation of parcels of land by the town Selectmen. Initially, each family was granted two acres of land, but over the years families were allocated more acreage. Governor John Winthrop was granted a significantly larger 600-acre parcel at Ten Hills in 1631 where he established Ten Hills Farm on the banks of the Mystic River.

Over time numerous dairy farms were established on the Common. The road out of the Charlestown Neck to Cambridge (Newtown) was called Charlestown Lane, initially laid out by Thomas Graves in 1632. In time, it became the route by which dairy farmers (Including H.P.Hood) brought milk into Boston, and it became known as Milk Row. In the later part of the 19th Century, Milk Row became Somerville Avenue. Broadway was historically known as the Road to Menotomy (Arlington) or the Winter Hill Road. By around 1700, there were probably 10 or 15 modest dwellings on the mainland, most near peninsular Charlestown. Eventually brickmaking and quarrying commenced as the tract began to become more industrial than agricultural. Additional roads and range ways were established, crisscrossing the tract. In 1803, the Middlesex Canal snaked through Medford and mainland Charlestown from Lowell, terminating at the Mill Pond adjacent to The Neck.

What is now Somerville was a critical staging area for operations leading up to and during the American Revolution while still part of Charlestown. A seminal event occurred in 1774 at the Powder House, originally built as a stone windmill in 1703-4 at Quarry Hill (now Powder House Square Somerville). In 1747 the windmill was sold to the Province of Massachusetts Bay and converted into a gunpowder storage magazine for both the British government and the surrounding communities. The provincials had become hugely dismayed with British Rule following the Stamp Act of 1765, the subsequent British Occupation of Boston beginning in 1768, and various events that followed. By 1774, the British observed provincials stockpiling weapons and ammunition. The largest stockpile of provincial gun powder in Massachusetts was located at the Charlestown Powder House, and surrounding towns had begun retrieving their expected allocations as a defensive measure.

On September 1, 1774, a situation occurred that nearly started the American Revolution seven and a half months before the Lexington Alarm. By order of General Gage, 260 British troops left Long Wharf in 13 skiffs, rowed up the Mystic River, and marched to the Charlestown Powder House to remove 250 remaining half-barrels of gunpowder as well as two cannons. This event caused a major disturbance, magnified by false rumors that the British had shot and killed several provincials during the removal. The rumor spread rapidly and the following day, 4,000 local militiamen converged on Cambridge in protest. The crowd demanded the resignation of Lieutenant-Governor Thomas Oliver and other officials of the Crown. It was soon realized, however, that rumors of provincial deaths were false and that a battle was not imminent. The crowd dispersed. This act of rebellion became known as the Powder Alarm and was a precursor to what happened the following spring.

On the night of April18th, the British marched through the night to Lexington via Milk Road and the old Concord Road (later Mass. Ave). Their purpose

Now casting: The next voice of Boston Logan International Airport

Special to the Patriot-Bridge

Boston Logan International Airport welcomes 43 million travelers a year and soon, each one will be greeted by a voice that captures the spirit of Massachusetts and New England. The Massachusetts Port Authority (Massport) announced the launch of Voice of Logan, a public competition inviting Massachusetts residents to audition for the opportunity to become the official overhead announcement voice of Boston Logan International Airport.

The Voice of Logan is a search for something distinctly Boston – a voice that instills confidence and hometown pride in every traveler, whether they're visiting for the first time, returning home, or simply passing through.

"At Boston Logan, we have been working hard to go above and beyond for our passengers. From new concessions to airport upgrades, we want every passenger to enjoy their time here," said Rich Davey, CEO of Massport. "During this milestone year, it was especially important that we help everyone passing through Logan to feel immediately at home. And there's no better way to do that than with one of the many diverse, distinct, and deeply proud voices that make up our Commonwealth."

Boston Logan is more than the gateway to New England, it's a snapshot of the region the moment you arrive. In Terminal C, more than 40 championship banners from iconic teams like the Boston Red Sox and New England Patriots welcome passengers with a sense of hometown pride. Throughout the airport, travelers can get a true taste of the area, whether it's a stop at the legendary Legal Sea Foods or a slice from neighborhood favorite Santarpio's Pizza. And along the Terminal B-C Connector, the spirit of the region comes alive through the sounds and stories of musicians who got their start right here in Massachusetts.

again was to remove or destroy provincial arms and gunpowder. That evening, dispatched by Dr. Joseph Warren, Paul Revere left Charlestown to ride into the countryside to warn that the British were coming. After being forced off his original path by British scouts outside the Neck, Revere altered his route and headed up Winter Hill Road to reach Lexington. William Dawes took a different route, initially riding south through Roxbury.

Following the infamous Concord Alarm and the fighting that ensued the next day, the British retreat to Charlestown was a brutal and bloody running battle, particularly in Menotomy. There was one final skirmish at Prospect Hill as the exhausted British made their way to Charlestown Neck. Throughout the night, the regulars evacuated Charlestown, returning to Boston aboard ferries and long boats, guarded by HMS Somerset. The Battle that had begun in Lexington ended in Charlestown.

Two months later, during the Battle of Bunker Hill, reinforcements were again positioned at Prospect Hill and Winter Hill. That day, Winter Hill became the site of one of the earliest makeshift field hospitals, established by Anne Adams Tufts. Subsequently, the Continental Army established a massive fort at Prospect Hill that became known as The Citadel, used by George Washington as an outlying command post for nine months during the Siege of Boston. Winter Hill continued to maintain its extensive earthwork fortifications. Both Winter Hill and Prospect Hill held Hessian mercenary prisoners after the British surrendered at Saratoga.

The Charlestown mainland was tactically important during the Lexington Alarm, the Battle of Bunker Hill and the Siege of Boston. It served as a critical defensive vantage point due to its location, its abundant high ground and the strategically located Mystic and Miller's Rivers. Charlestown and Somerville share a profoundly deep historic bond that goes back almost four centuries.

Today's Charlestown encompasses the original peninsular village and adjacent 'neck village', as well as the vastly expanded landmass created by the filling-in of the surrounding waterways that commenced in 1835. Somerville's boundaries remain largely the same as they were in 1842 when it became a separate town after over 200 years of being part of Charlestown.
